

Published based on Air Traffic Control Striking In Spain

Air Traffic Control Striking In Spain

once again it seems that there are problems in the airline industry with more airline staff striking and this time it seems to be the Spanish air traffic control staff, it would seem that when it comes to this industry there is always something going wrong and I am not sure they are actually getting any less money than I am so what is the issue.

It would seem that they can strike and get away with it because thousands of people rely on them and they have the power not to be ignored by people, I know that if I went on strike there would not be many people that cared, they are really just upsetting the people that are hoping to go on their travels this week!!

The Nature Of The Strike

Like with all of the strikes in this kind of sector it is over money and this is really annoying because the chiefs of the company really couldn't care less about these people and the only thing the people are doing is upsetting everyone else.

On the other hand I can understand where they are coming from, if they are not getting paid enough money for what they are doing then what choice do they actually have? They have most likely tried everything else and if their standard of living is threatened by low pay then I most certainly see their point.

The main issue is for the people looking to go on a Moraira holiday because they might not get to go on their vacation. Although the strike has said to happen on the 18th of August this has not been confirmed so it could all change so be warned!

Look out for those Spanish villa images still because the chances are something will happen to fix this whole mess up and you will still have your trip away!

You can also find this article published on Air Traffic Control Striking In Spain, and on the tag pages air traffic control, airline staff, issue, spanish air, staff, strike.