

Published based on Aviation jobs and careers

Aviation jobs and careers

An interesting way of making a living is to work on aeroplanes. If you are an aeroplane lover, and have been your whole life, you would love to work on aeroplanes. There are various roles you could get that allow you to work with planes, from pilots to baggage handlers at the airport. Fitter jobs are an option that will allow you to use your mechanical skills in building planes.

If you want to get into aviation jobs and fancy some adventure you can go through the armed forces. In the military you will be given the best training and you will be paid whilst you are training. You will have the chance to work with the latest technology and gadgets in aviation work. A-levels in physics and maths are required to become an RAF pilot. Army engineers have people who work on the army helicopters.

If you have been exposed to life in the aviation industry from a young age the chances are higher that you will go into this industry for a career. A child who is dreaming of becoming a pilot will be more motivated to study maths and physics if the teacher explains the importance of these subjects. Top grades are vital for getting top jobs. Training that is sponsored, whether in the military or in civilian life, requires good grades at school.

It costs a small fortune to train to be a pilot. Becoming a commercial airline pilot requires a lot of training and many hours of flying experience.

When searching for aviation jobs you can use the internet. The world leader in online aviation recruitment on the internet is www.aviationjobsearch.com. Not only can you view vacancies, but you can also upload your CV and employers will be able to view your information.

You can also find this article published on Aviation jobs and careers, and on the tag pages army, army helicopters, aviation, commercial airline pilot, raf pilot, training.