As a backpacker or budget traveler, you should visit the summer resorts and beaches that dot the Spanish coastline. A lot of the hotels, amenities, shops, establishments, and facilities in these beaches are very much within your budget. Cheap holidays to Spain is not to be underestimated; this type of tourism generates a large portion for the Spanish economy. There are several factors of this growth: a mild and pleasant climate, white-sand beaches, beautiful underwater landscapes, modern facilities, wonderful culture, and others.

Among the country's attractions, Spanish beaches are widely known by both international and local tourists alike. When visiting Spain, don't forget to head out to the Spanish coasts which include:

- * The Costa Brava, Costa Daurada, and the Costa del Maresme in the autonomous community of Catalonia. These regions are favorites French visitors and Spanish locals. Catalonia is the home of well-known resorts such as Salou and the second largest city in Spain, Barcelona.
- * The Costa del Azahar, Costa de Valencia and Costa Blanca in the Valencia region. The beaches in these areas are preferred by tourists from the United Kingdom and Germany. The area is home to the summer capital of Spain, Benidorm. It is also home to Valencia, a city known for its old churches, cathedrals, forts, and fortresses.
- * The Costa Calida in the Murcia Region and the Mediterranean coasts where visitors can relax in the pleasant climate of the Mediterranean Sea. You can also visit Mar Menor, an inner salt lake that is separated to the Mediterranean through a big sandy strip.
- * The Costa Tropical, Costa del Sol, Costa del Sol, and Costa de Almeria, which are all located in Andalusia. These coasts are well-known for their summer towns which exhibit the rustic, charming, and classic side of Spain.
- * The volcanic archipelago of the Canary Islands which displays amazing flora and fauna and spectacular beaches.
