

Published based on Kids Playing Golf

Kids Playing Golf

I am certainly not a keen golfer, far from it in fact but I did play a little bit when I was younger as my dad kind of forced me to give it a go, it was rubbish but at least I tried!. so although I tried it and I was okay at the sport, it just was not a sport for me. However there are many schemes out there across the world that help young people get into golf and of all of the ones I have heard of I think that the local course my Dad plays at is actually one of the strangest and it comes in the form of a chocolate bar.

A Chocolate Bar?

Forget those golf batteries and leisure batteries as an incentive to actually win the mini tournaments played by training youngsters at this club they will offer out not one but two chocolate bars to the person who comes out on top in the smaller tournaments. I am pretty sure TV chef Jamie Oliver would not really agree when it comes to something like this but it is a great idea for kids to improve their game.

one thing you need to know is that these are only very small chocolate bars and this is not going to make too much of a difference when it comes to things. This cannot happen by the way as the same person is not allowed to win the chocolate bars two weeks in a row which is a bit fairer on the other kids playing. Also a prize is given out each week for the best competitor (basically a kid is chosen at random each week).

So forget those marine batteries, chocolate bars are the way forward when it comes to trainee golfers!

You can also find this article published on Kids Playing Golf, and on the tag pages bit, chocolate, chocolate bar, chocolate bars, dad, marine batteries.