When You Are Now Covered Through Medicare Make Sure That You Verify Your Status Before Vacationing

Senior travelers usually aren't aware that Medicare doesn't cover for them while they are traveling. Our elders who have gone before us and provided us with wisdom from the past shouldn't be left with no proper information. We should be doing better than that, to tell them in advance that if they are on a vacation that their insurance does nothing for them.

Traditional medical needs and hospital coverage are not offered by Medicare, and when traveling outside the country this can make for an even worse situation if an emergency arises. In case of a medical emergency where you may need medical evacuation it may cost you $10,000 up to $100,000 which is a huge amount especially for an elderly person. With a population that is living on a fixed income it really doesn't make a lot of sense that they would go without travel insurance. There are several varieties of travel health insurance plans available, including some cheap travel insurance plans such as senior citizen travel insurance.

For short trips, coverage would also be less expensive, nevertheless it still is a must have. Even if you are traveling to Canada or Mexico it will be of significant advantage to have travel insurance. If you don't frequently travel, then single trip coverage could be ideal for you.

There's also a policy available for senior citizens that will provide them with coverage throughout the whole year and they can have more than 1 trip within a 90 day period. When searching for the right policy, it would be a good idea to let the insurance company know where you will be going since there might be restrictions for places considered as high risk.

The leanest policy anyone on Medicare can get is simply going to cover trip cancellation and medical insurance. But in the end, it would all depend on where you will be traveling and what you will be doing when you get there.
